

Funeral Address of Mrs. Henry Wilson.

BY W. C. BROWN.

The voice of inspiration is the voice of this hour saying in solemn tones "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." The astronomer can tell you when any star shall cross this meridian a year hence; the merest child can affirm with a certainty, that in a month or two more the trees will be bare of leaves and the earth covered with snow. The student of geometry can demonstrate beyond a doubt that any side of a triangle is less than the sum of the other two. But not so with reference to life, its duration and possessions. Here all is uncertain. Yesterday bank stocks or broad acres were ours; to-day a sudden turn in the tide of events has swept them from our grasp. Yesterday the eye sparkled, the pulse thrilled, and the voice charmed with the melody of to-day the eye is dim, the pulse still and the voice silent. Yesterday friends cheered us with their companionship, sympathy and inspiring words; to-day they are gone from us. We call them, but they answer not, for between that yesterday and this to-day the wave of life has come and gone. Did we know when these misfortunes would touch us then would we be prepared. But no messenger warns of impending danger. Unannounced and unexpected the avalanche crushes, the pestilence scourges, the wave engulfs or the fire consumes. Only a few brief months ago an S. T. Conway and a Chandler Richards were suddenly stricken down. Only a morning ago the angel of death entered this home circle and laid his sable mantle over the shoulders of a wife, mother and neighbor. No warning signal was seen nor voice heard announcing the approach of the enemy. Stealthily and quickly as the savage springs from his ambush, did death lay hold upon this loved one, with flush of health upon the brow and the heart buoyant with the anticipation of a pleasant trip northward. Death was thought of as belonging to the far off future. But alas in the midst of life we are in the midst of death. We plan but do not execute; we hope but do not realize. At morn we enter upon our daily work with a feeling of strength and power, but ere the eventide comes we are cut down and withered like new mown grass. Well hath it been said:

"The evening dawn, the morning dew,
The withering grass, the fading flower,
Of earthly things are emblem true—
The glory of a passing hour."

So promptly was the message delivered and so swift the flight of death's arrow, that no time was given in which to say "good-bye" and "God bless you." Pleading indeed as it would have been to you who remain could it have been so, yet no last words were needed, for in all the earnest years of her life she had spoken as one who had stood near to the mysteries of the eternal world. Her last hours were not filled with suffering, nor disturbed by any sad mourning over the past, or anxious doubt of what awaited her behind the veil. She fell asleep as quietly and gently as does the infant upon its mother's breast. Death for her was simply a sunset without clouds. Not yet do you, who knew her best and loved her most, fully realize that she has gone forever to return. For forty years she was with you in the relation of wife, mother and friend. Being with you so long and so intimately you thought not that she would never leave you. In an hour, however, when you were least prepared and when you least expected it, the "Master came and called her away."

And now for her, earth's pilgrimage is ended and the land of many mansions entered. Not through a "glass darkly," but face to face she now beholds her Savior and the loved ones of earlier days. To you who remain this separation brings sorrow; to her joy. To you it is the loss of a wife, mother and sister; to her it is an eternal gain. While here she had no abiding city; now she stands with the gates of heaven open before her. She is no longer a stranger in a "strange land," but a citizen of the city whose "foundations are eternal" and whose "builder and maker is God." Here toil and pain racked the body; there she is at rest in the presence of her God. The body is dead but the spirit, with all its powers has risen into new life and beauty. The silver cord has only been changed into a golden one, the corruptible into the incorruptible, and the mortal into the immortal.

As we offer our last tribute of respect and love to her who has so quietly completed a life whose work is done, we can also rightly estimate its worth and influence. We could not have done so before, for as the colors in fading when first laid on disappear and leave no trace behind them, but by and by reappear in beauty, so the daily coloring and building of life sinks out of view, and it is not until death removes the limitations of disease and sense that its loveliness, symmetry, and nobleness, is fully revealed. With this life, then, that in its completion we cannot but affirm that it was singularly beautiful and noble. Esteeming duty an angel walking reverently by her side, believing that the best part of human character is a tenderness and delicacy of feeling in little matters; holding that every day brings to our hand the possibility of kindly service, and knowing that death is simply a key which unlocks the portals of peace, sister Wilson was undemonstrative in her deportment, and faithful in the relation of life. As a wife she ever proved herself a wise counselor, a faithful co-laborer, and a loving companion. As a mother she was patient, kind and thoughtful, ever seeking to train the children given, in paths of truth and righteousness. As a friend many of you have known her these forty years and found her true and unchangeable; the same in the days of prosperity and affliction as in the days of pioneer hardship and danger. As a Christian she was not perfect—no one is—but she was humble and truthful. The great depths of religion she never sought to fathom, but trustfully as a little child she held of the one essential truth, that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin.

To-day the heart bleeds, the eye weeps, and voice quivers, because of these relations so rarely and quickly broken. But mourn not, oh bereaved, for He who was made perfect through suffering, tenderly whispers to the listening ear the wondrous words: "I will not leave you comfortless, and since I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me shall never die." Then let not your heart be troubled. This separation is only till "earth's little while is passed," then, if obedient children of your Heavenly Father, a glorious reunion and an eternity of fellowship with this sainted one.

Standing in the presence of death and of God I would ask you who mourn most bitterly because of this parting, to remember that this sorrow will change you for all time. You cannot come up out of its depths as you went down. Life can never again be the old life for you can think of it in the same old way. This transmutation will either strengthen or weaken. The Lord grant that it may strengthen and that you as husband and children may see of mother's God as did one of old "Thy God shall be my God and thy people my people."

My dear friends and neighbors, to you who have gathered here to honor the memory of the departed, let me say that only a little longer life with its power to will, with its strength to bear, to love and conquer, is yours, and as the shadows of night will soon gather about you, let me ask as in the light of eternity, "Is it well with your soul?"

Have you insured it as you have your property and body against future contingencies? If not, delay no longer, but heed well the voice of the hour, "Be ye ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."
